

Invitation to take part in our research on psychological support in palliative care.

We seek to understand the psychological support provided to people with terminal illnesses and their families, and would really appreciate your help!

If you:

- Are currently employed by a non-NHS hospice as a doctor, nurse, allied health professional, chaplain, healthcare assistant, or in any other patient/family-facing role.
- Are based in the UK or the Republic of Ireland.
- Can speak English
- Are not a clinical psychologist or mental health specialist

We would love it if you could complete our questionnaire focused on current practices regarding psychological support, and how you feel about providing psychological support to people with a terminal illness.

Your input will be extremely valuable and will help us determine whether or not there is a need for staff training and support in this area.

This research is being conducted by Sulafa Fakhreddin, Sarah Huibregtse Van Loon, Mhairi McDougall, and Fatema Zavery, postgraduate researchers in Clinical Psychology at the University of Edinburgh and is being supervised by Dr Anne Finucane (a.finucane@ed.ac.uk).

Recognising your valuable time, we will have a prize draw with 5 X 30-pound Amazon vouchers.

For further information, please email: PsychPall@ed.ac.uk

To access further study information and the questionnaire, please click here or scan the QR code:

<https://edinburgh.onlinesurveys.ac.uk/psychological-support-in-palliativecare>

THE UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH

